Priekule church and Ikars
The legend says that the blacksmith of Priekule manor made wings and flew with them from the church tower. The flight was successful, only the blacksmith was punished for his audacity. Now this man is called Priekule's Ikars. This image still appears as a symbol in the city environment and at local events.

The Zviedru gate in Priekule
During the war, the Swedish Gate was destroyed, then rebuilt and restored. Two threatening stone guards stood in the niches built on both sides of the passageway of Priekule manor gate. There was a belief before World War II – those kissing the gate guard's belly button will be happy in the future.

Lielbāta Spring
Lielbāta's natural spring is the largest in Latvia, which brings biologically active and properly structured water to the surface of the earth from the depths. The spring flows from west to east towards the sun, so it has long been considered magical, even sacred with healing abilities.

Rebuilt, destroyed, burned and rebuilt several times. The restoration of the church began in 2009. Well, it has been restored again, and the sound of the new church bell again invites the congregation and guests to come, be silent, spend a moment with God.
